

told him that I would not change my mind even if he were to go as far as committing suicide in front of me. Harsh words, but necessary at that time.

I guess the kidnapping was his retaliation. His extremely belated attempt to regain some semblance of his man hood. Not realizing it is too late.

Yes. His weakness disgusts me.

But his ignorance angers me. He blindly went about his task so sure that he was right - he kidnapped me, he held me hostage in Xi'an, he forced me to ally myself with the CDP, because he is so wrapped up in his own delusions of what he mistakenly thinks is best for China. Why can he not see that it is not Japan that is the “greater threat”? Japan's attack is comparable to a surface wound on an individual's skin. It may hurt and it may be undesirable, but fundamentally it is not fatal. Great degrees of care are not required and in time it will heal. Why can he not see the dangers of Communism? If Japan's attack is a wound, Communism is a cancer. Communism is a cancerous tumor that grows inside a person, which destroys them from the inside. If it is left alone it is most definitely fatal, thus to rid oneself of cancer one must eliminate all traces of the tumor – if even one tiny piece of it is left it will grow again. And it will be just as dangerous. Just as fatal. Communism is a cancer growing in China and removing every trace of it from this country is just as urgent and vital as removing a tumor.

But wait, no. I speak too soon-

It is even more vital. It is more vital because we are talking about a country. Our country. China. If Communism grows in China, it is not just one individual that will lose its life. An entire country will die. The leader of the CDP will kill China from the inside. All of the civilization we have thus worked for. All of the progress we have made. It will all have been for nothing.

And at this time when the issue of removing Communism is more vital and pressing than ever they are forcing me to work with it. To work with the goddamned cancer!

It makes me sick.
